August Belmont was delighted with the success of his hunter Saracen last week at the Horse Show, not only because he won two prizes but because he is a son of Octagon. Saracen is a chestnut gelding by Octagon out of an Irish hunting mare, and he was shown in the class for hunters, not to jump, where the horses were judged on conformation and quality. Later Saracen won the champion cup for hunters, not to jump, when shown with the other class witners, and then Saracen defeated Sally Coombs, the thoroughbred owned by F. Ambrose Clark.

Although no knockdowns were scored the bout from start to finish was full of action. In the last three rounds both boys mixed it up at a rapid pace. Hommey at the the opening of the seventh round rushed out of his corner and landed a right swing to the stomach. Coster doubled up and held on for a few seconds. Hommey then forced him to the ropes, trying to land a blow on the jaw. Coster was too shifty on his feet and put in several left jabs to the face which made Hommey step back.

In the eighth round Coster forced Packey to the ropes, sending in straight jabs to the face and his right to the stomach. Hommey tried hard to come back but his blows went wild.

As the ninth opened Hommey started out well for a few seconds and landed often on the side of the head. His blows lacked the steam and Coster covered up well. Near the end of the round Coster kept both his hands working hard and had the round by a good margin.
